ACLL/ACTC 2014 Programme Cover Image: "Cherry Blossoms at Yoshino"

Cherry Blossoms at Yoshino from the series Snow, Moon, and Flowers (Setsugekka) by Katsushika Hokusai (1760–1849), a Japanese artist, ukiyo-e painter, and printmaker of the Edo period.

The most famous place in Japan for viewing cherry blossoms is Mount Yoshino in the Kii peninsula, located a 2-hour drive to the south-east of Osaka. The cherry blossoms here bloom a few weeks after blossoms in Osaka, with the annual cherry blossom festival being held on the third Saturday in April. The whole of Mount Yoshino is registered as a UNESCO World Heritage Site and is home to around 200 different types and thirty thousand cherry trees.

welcome to acll/actc 2014

Dear Delegates,

My co-chair Barbara Lockee and I, are pleased to welcome you to IAFOR's Fourth Annual Asian Conference on Language Learning and the Fourth Annual Asian Conference on Technology in the Classroom.

It is spring and in Japan that means it is cherry blossom viewing time. Cherry blossom viewing is an important cultural event here and has been for hundreds of years. Blossoms live for about a week before falling down like snow to the ground. Samurai were compared to cherry blossoms because like the blossoms they were to live short, intense, brilliant lives.

What does this have to do with our conferences? Well, while we do not expect any falling down, we do feel that all of us are in for an intense few days. The theme of the conferences is Individual, Community, Society: Connecting, Learning and Growing. When combined with language learning and technology in the classroom, we are in for a brilliant and rewarding time. From the welcome party through to the closing ceremony, the next few days should engage and challenge you as you hear from both experienced educators and new up-and-coming teacher-researchers. It will be a chance to renew old acquaintances, make new contacts, and network across higher education. Come Sunday evening, we will not be the same teachers we were on Thursday! And we will be sad at how fast the time went by.

Having lived in Osaka for 19 years, I would be remiss to not welcome you to this great city as well. You will be able to enjoy a wide range of cuisine in one of the most friendly cities in Japan. Should you have time after the conference, Kyoto, Kobe, and Nara are close by with their temples, views, and nature. And less than 20 minutes from the conference site by public transportation is Osaka Castle Park with the castle, or Osaka Jo as it is known, proudly standing in the middle of the park and well worth a visit.

Having had a preview of the programme, I am confident when I say that all of us will take many things away from these sessions! So enjoy the conference (and Osaka) and I hope to see you at some of the events we have scheduled, such as the complimentary welcome reception on Thursday evening or the Conference Dinner on Friday evening. What better way to continue discussions and networking than over a meal?!

Happy Conferencing!

Each presenter should have no less than 30 minutes in which to present his or her paper, and respond to any questions.

The session chair is asked to assume this timekeeping role, and to this end, a yellow and red coloured timekeeping card is used as a visual cue for presenters, letting them know when they have 5 minutes remaining, and when they must stop.

Please follow the order in the programme, and if for any reason a presenter fails to show, please keep to the original timeslots as delegates use the programme to plan their attendance.

Featured Speech: Answerless Riddles: Stories from Language Learning Classrooms

Some riddles have no final answers. A few answerless riddles are still worth asking. They are worth asking not for their answers, since they have none, but for what we do in struggling with them. (Earl Stevick, Teaching Languages: A Way and Ways)

Earl Stevick is one of my favorite authors when it comes to language learning and teaching. I was first introduced to his work while a graduate student at the School for International Training in Brattleboro, Vermont. Ever since then I have remembered the quotation above as it sums up for me what we do as we try to make sense of our calling, our chosen profession—teaching. Using the conference theme, Individual, Community, Society: Connecting, Learning and Growing as a point of departure, let's take some time to look at the riddles that are teaching and learning, technology and language. What's the best way to teach? How can students learn more efficiently? How can technology fit into language learning? For me, these and questions like them are some of those answerless riddles that are worth asking. Let's use this session to struggle with them as we "connect, learn, and grow" together.

Globalization, Culture and the individual--in an example from English education in Japan

Culture offers an exclusive, epistemological system to make sense of the self and the world. Under cultural instructions, members see what and as they are supposed to see. The language is a major player of this role. This presentation focusses on how the same language and the culture may also offer a chance for the individual, speaker/observer, to go out of this closed epistemological and ontological circuit. The example is taken from English education in Japan.

The education filters the inferential and interactive structure of English which supports the speaker to move from the observation of the concrete to its abstract articulation through his act of reasoning. English is reduced to referential relationships, to be leveled with Japanese. The speaker loses the chance to articulate their individuation.

Here, two choices are available between continuing to filter inference and assimilating inference with reference. The latter may allow speakers to take advantage of the combination of English reasoning in abstraction and Japanese referential randomness/directness with the concrete, and to go out of fixations. The former continues to provide social security by trimming epistemological deviances.

The presentation stresses creativity by the speakers, which necessitates individuation, but not determinism.

Keynote Speech: Improving School/Home Communication With Online Blogs

New Zealand has a very different education to that in Japan. Like Japan, there are both strengths and weaknesses in the New Zealand education system. One of the strengths of the New Zealand education system that is different from Japan is that the schools are governed by Boards of Trustees, not by the Ministry of Education. Boards of Trustees comprise seven elected parents, the principal, one elected staff member and in the case of secondary schools, an elected student. Schools have a great deal of autonomy to make their own decisions, with the Boards of Trustees even deciding which teachers to hire, and whom to hire as principal.

The reason for giving so much power to New Zealand parents is to increase their involvement in the education of their children. But a governance role still does not inform parents about what is happening to their child in the classroom on a daily basis. The research outlined in this presentation was instigated to investigate whether online parental access to classroom blogs could help to bridge the gap between home and school.

A classroom at a New Zealand intermediate (middle) school in a lower socio-economic area was selected for the research location because the teacher and students of the class were compiling regular blogs about the teaching/learning process. The parents of the students were offered online access to the classroom blogs that the teacher and students had created, followed by a survey of the parent's opinions about having online access to the classroom in this manner.

This presentation will outline the New Zealand education context and describe the results of the research project. Possible implications for Japan will also be discussed.

She has worked on several research projects and has collected the largest Finnish child's language dataset to date in collaboration with the Max Planck Institute for Evolutionary Anthropology.

Featured Speech: First and Second Language Acquisition Researchers: the things that unite and separate us

Language acquisition is a process that has recently been described as "chaotic." Many factors contribute to the learners' ultimate level of language mastery, and no single theory can exhaustively explain the processes in the learners' brain. Not only second language learners but also native speakers show clear differences in their ability to express themselves and produce meaning in written and spoken form.

The presenters of this session, each an expert of either first or second language acquisition, have partnered to discuss language learning factors that are common among language learners whether they are children or adults. The purpose of this paper is to demonstrate that cross-disciplined work between first and second language researchers can be beneficial to both sides and can help enlighten and inform the work that is being done with children and adults.

Teaching English as a Foreign Language: Curriculum Development for Communicative Competence

The discussion revolves around a research conducted on developing the most effective curriculum for students studying English as a foreign/second language. The aim of such a research is to analyze the ESL textbooks of a country on factors such as general criterion and teaching communicative competence. Communicative competence is extensively acknowledged as an excellent way to ensure a successful language teaching program. It is based on instilling proficiency in the target language by improving the abilities and potential of second language learners. The term communicative competence describes the learner's proficiency and expertise in handling the target language in all kinds of communications in real life situations with confidence and understanding of how/when to use certain vocabulary items depending on contextual elements, however, this does not mean that the learner should have native like accuracy or fluency. This discussion is based on my research work regarding Pakistan's ESL textbooks in which questionnaire and discussion methods were used. The questionnaire was based on certain significant elements identified from various checklists employed for material evaluation along with a section based on the four techniques of communicative competence. The completed questionnaire was submitted by English teachers who were teaching at different secondary levels from selected government schools, later followed by a description of the strengths and weaknesses of their respective textbooks. In the second phase, the four important areas of communicative competence were analyzed by selecting and evaluating the three main ESL text books being used in Pakistan. The framework will be shared with the audience to enable them to analyze the textbooks within their own respective countries.

Closing Session Featured Speech: Helping language learners build knowledge

This talk will focus on ways to help learners build knowledge as they learn second or foreign languages, enabling them to join the target language community. In a country like Japan, where learners, teachers and the society of which they form a part share the same first language, other languages may be squeezed out even when there is a desire to learn them. Despite time, effort and good intentions, neither Willingness to Communicate (MacIntyre, Clément, Dörnyei & Noels, 1998), nor skills training, nor Communicative Language Teaching has provided a viable way forward for those who wish to or need to learn other languages.

JALTCALL 2012, the Conference Chair for Peace as a Global Language in 2011, and serves as Membership Chair for Teachers Helping Teachers (THT), part of The Japan Association For Language Teaching, as well as THT delegate leader to Kyrgyzstan. His research interests include content-based instruction, genre-based pedagogy, ICT, and multimodality.

A solution put forward by Byrnes (2006) is to draw on lessons from Sociocultural Theory and Systemic Functional Linguistics, using functional descriptions of language in context to assist language learners. Drawing lessons from Byrnes (2006), three main areas are attended to. The first examines the need for a commitment to teaching language learners up to their potential, whether intermediate or advanced, in the target language. The second explores ways to help L2 learners understand meaning in the texts that they read and those they construct. Acceptance in a social or cultural group requires being able to analyse and break down a variety of texts and understand how they work. The third is the use of technology in language education. Technology represents one part of the solution, and it will be argued that technology should be embraced in the digital age just as it was embraced when it meant the printing press, or the pencil.

Closing Session Featured Speech:

It follows that efforts be directed more towards the building of knowledge, by such means as integrating content and language instruction.

IAFOR The International Academic Forum Academic Vision and Mission

"To Open Minds, To Educate Intelligence, To Inform Decisions"

The vision of IAFOR grew out of the perceived need to fill a vacuum in the communication and exchange activities of the academic world. Its mission arose out of examining that space and investigating why it existed. The vacuum existed because of the lack of opportunity for serious and thoughtful exchange between academics, members of the global business community, and practitioners in the fields of human endeavor that linked these groups together. In the field of education, for example, we have academic theorists, educational managers (political decision-makers and organizational directors) and classroom teachers with their support staff in IT, library work, exchange programs, and specialist fields. But how often do they have the opportunity to interact?

Moving beyond one particular field, larger questions arise. What function should universities prioritize in the 21st century? What do businesses see as their contribution to social and global well being? How can people on the ground, trying to implement improvements that will transform human life, best be supported? And perhaps above all, what are the agendas that will drive mechanisms to enable these groups to interact effectively.

One piece of distilled thought that came from early exchanges at one of our conferences was the recognition that some of the rhetoric of concern about the problems of developing nations was perhaps over-focused on the term "poverty" because it can be defined only in a relative way. "Hunger" was put forward as being more immediate and itself a contributory factor to poverty, rather than the other way round. One key to the hunger issue could be the provision of safe drinking water, or water for irrigation in some contexts, while flood management might be necessary elsewhere. These, in and by themselves become valuable only insofar as they help to relieve hunger in specific contexts.

IAFOR is affording opportunities that do not exist elsewhere. The base is Osaka, Japan's great commercial and manufacturing hub, one symbol of the emerging Pacific economy that is already eclipsing the long dominant Atlantic zone. Our conferences present those taking part with three unique dimensions of experience. First of all, it encourages interdisciplinary activity to be expanded. Depending on the field, this can face varying degrees of difficulty, ranging from discouragement to downright prohibition. Those overly dependent on fixed academic structures often see lateral thinking as a threat. None of these negatives apply in IAFOR. Its purpose is to generate new approaches that cross any disciplinary lines. The principle employed is to let the imagination permit intuitive responses to questions. There are no panels of critics. There are simply people who want to listen and reflect. The model of academic work as potholing is replaced by the metaphor of mountaineering. While respecting the need for solid and well-founded academic work, we feel the need to go beyond it from time to time to discover fresh approaches to old questions.

Secondly, it facilitates the heightening of intercultural awareness. Again, we encourage innovation through cross-cultural perception. Cultural roots influence people in their attitudes more than most would realize or admit. The need to see and internalize insights gained from other viewpoints is met by a process of steady illumination.

Thirdly, it promotes the broadening of international exchange. We may live in a globalized world, but in reality parochialism still holds sway. The collapse of the U.S.S.R and the break-up of Yugoslavia led to the re-establishment of numerous former countries. While this may be desirable for the peoples concerned, it merely adds to the world's cultural confusion. Exchange leads to explanation and that helps the growth of intercultural awareness.

IAFOR makes all of these developments possible in one gathering. Our conferences are not a substitute for specialist conferences. We intend our events to be an alternative that functions as a balance or even a corrective to the extreme tendencies that can arise from more narrowly defined research parameters. In short, IAFOR is promoting and facilitating a new multifaceted approach to one of the core issues of our time, namely globalization and its many forms of growth and expansion. Awareness of how it cuts across the worlds of business, and academia, along with its impact on societies and institutions is one of the driving forces that has given the organization its momentum, and is making it a pioneer in this global age.

IAFOR's Open Access
Publishing Committment

IAFOR is committed to providing ALL of its publications in online form for no fee.

Researchers and scholars, regardless of institutional affiliation and status, can access our academic journals, monographs, magazine, conference materials and special publications for no charge, wherever there is internet access.

IAFOR will never ask authors to contribute towards publication costs, or engage in other such publishing practices which we believe undermine academic independence and integrity.

IAFOR Journals

The International Academic Forum's Journals conform to the highest academic standards of international peer review, and are published in accordance with the IAFOR publishing commitment to make all of our published materials available online.

Journals FAQ

How are journal editors appointed?

Journal Editors are appointed by the International Academic Forum's leadership, under the guidance of the Chairman of the International Advisory Board. The term of appointment is for one issue, to be renewed by mutual consent.

How do we ensure academic integrity?

Once appointed, the editor is free to appoint his or her own editorial team and advisory members. All papers published in the journal have been subjected to the rigorous and accepted processes of academic peer review. Neither editors nor members of the editorial team are remunerated for their work. Authors will never be asked to "contribute" towards publication costs.

How are papers selected?

Journal Editors may accept papers through an open call, and proposed articles may be sent directly to the respective editors. A small number of papers from the associated IAFOR conference proceedings may also be selected by the journal editor(s) for reworking and revising subject to normal processes of review. It is expected that between 5 and 10 percent of papers included in any given conference proceedings will be developed for inclusion in the associated conference journal.

How are IAFOR Journals related to IAFOR conferences?

IAFOR's journals reflect the interdisciplinary and international nature of our conferences and are organized thematically. Papers included in the associated conference proceedings may be considered for reworking by the editor(s), and would then be subjected to the same processes of peer review as papers submitted by other means.

IAFOR Keynotes

The IAFOR Keynotes series is a collection of keynote addresses, or associated papers given at our conferences. Presented as a part of the open research archive, the Keynotes series provides an example of the range and quality of speakers at IAFOR events. These keynotes are lightly reworked, and contain references, but are otherwise true to the original address. Many can also be seen in video format on our YouTube page. Whether you were present at the conference or not, the keynotes are thoughtful addresses by senior academics, the content of which may help your research.

Special Series & Monographs

The International Academic Forum is publishing a number of special monographs in print and online form. One such publication is a selection of haiku from the Annual Vladimir Devidé Haiku Award.

Eye Magazine

Through Eye magazine, the International Academic Forum's own inhouse e-magazine publication, we hope to enlighten you to various views and opinions of our contributors, many of whom, have presented full research papers at our various conferences.

The Spring 2014 edition of Eye magazine includes an exclusive interview with Severn Cullis-Suzuki, a new design layout, as well as some other great articles, op-eds and essays. Eye magazine is available on the IAFOR website and through the ISSUU reader on your browser or mobile device.
